

AFC Hartmetall conducting business as usual during COVID-19 outbreak

Dear valued customers and business partners,

First and foremost, we share great concern for all the people in regions across the world impacted by the COVID-19 virus outbreak. Like all organizations during the past few months, we have been closely monitoring the situation so we can safeguard our associates and the communities in which we operate while minimizing any potential disruptions to our business.

We have not been directly impacted by the virus, and our manufacturing operations are running as normal. As part of Hyperion Materials & Technologies, we are a global organization that sources raw materials from all over the world, and our supply chain remains stable and secure. We have a large stock of raw materials to continue producing as normal. We also have a large stock of products in our Mainleus, Germany; Gurnee, Ill.; and Tokyo, Japan fulfillment centers and have not experienced any impacts to our delivery times.

However, some upcoming global exhibitions we were planning to participate in postponed their show dates. We were looking forward to connecting with our many existing and prospective clients, and we understand the importance of delaying these global gatherings.

We are always eager to connect with our business partners and potential customers. So, if you are interested in learning more about how we apply our materials science, engineering and manufacturing expertise to position our customers to win, contact your sales representative or fill out the form on our website so we can help you develop innovative, high-performance solutions.
